

The Elizabeth Hunter™ Insights into the Card Carrying 1006 Appraiser

I am socially adroit and thrive in group settings. I see myself as the stereotypical cheerleader or quarterback of the football team.

I am very popular and uncontroversial. I'm not very interested in abstract concepts and prefer gossip or office politics to novels. I am not particularly creative or innovative and prefer to work within existing structures.

I value these traditional rules and structures, upholding the values and morals of the society that I belong to. I am altruistic, if not particularly imaginative or accepting of alternative versions of altruism.

I'm told that there are lots like me and you've probably encountered your fair share of folk like me throughout your life.

Regarding work I emphasize order and hierarchy and I don't mind working on projects that involve repetitive or monotonous tasks. I am generally reliable and thrive in places with clearly laid out rules and structures. I like administrative roles and I'm great at them because of my natural aversion to conflict, their love of order, and their practical skills.

I am incredibly social and would not do well working from home or in jobs with very little interpersonal interactions. I am generally well-liked at work, and don't step on too many toes. I am respectful of authority and enjoy working on teams. I am very sensitive to feedback and it's important to be well-liked and popular. While generally a good thing, this can make me overly sensitive to interpersonal reactions and often results in inflexibility in the workplace.

Sometimes I can be too needy, insecure and dependent on the positive feedback of their managers.

Composed from scanning the Blogosphere. It is not possible to allocate attributions to this research as Elizabeth Hunter™ is of the view that most participants in blogs contribute on line under some sort of alias, pen name or other form of obfuscation.

Latest update: April 21, 2019